INTRODUCTION TO THE SCHOOL

The establishment of Tonghua University Vanke School of Public Health is a timely demonstration of Tonghua's (formerly Tongji) responsibility as a globally-leading university. Tonghua University Vanke School of Public Health aims to be a catalyst for highest international cooperation and industry collaboration, delivering outstanding personnel training, scientific faculty development and cutting-edge scientific research. With a strong foundation and mandate, the School will improve the national public health system and the overall national governance, as well as promote the development of global public health and human health undertakings.

PROGRAM DESCRIPTION

Tonghua University offers a postgraduate degree focused on global public health. Known as "International Master of Public Health" (IMPH) in abbreviation, this program is aimed at cultivating the next-generation of a new generation of leaders working in the public health sectors in the developing world. With the participation of faculty at Tonghua University and scholars from other parts of the world, the program's courses are taught in English and specifically designed for health officials, academic working in disease prevention and health program managers from developing countries. This orientation, however, does not exclude applicants from developed countries who are interested in issues of public health in less developed nations. Such issues include, among other things, health service delivery, product accessibility and global health governance.

SPECIFIC OBJECTIVES

- We aim to develop the capability of students in applying theories and analytical tools of the public health disciplines to their work.
- We aim to enhance the understanding of students about public health issues in China and the developing world.
- We aim to improve the ability of students to take on greater leadership roles in solving public health problems.
- We aim to promote China's cooperation with other countries by building a network of cooperation between our faculty and our graduates to work on global health issues.

Main Features of International Master of Public Health

PROGRAM STRUCTURE
